

Eun Mie Lim, Ph. D

Eun Mie Lim is the director and professor of Ewha-KOICA Master's Program at the Graduate School of International Studies, Ewha Womans University. She is a development sociologist who specializes in gender and development, gender relations in developing countries, international development cooperation, and migration and development. She received her B.A from Ewha Womans University and Doctorate and Master's degrees from the University of Washington. She teaches courses on Gender and Development, Gender Mainstreaming in Development, Gender Relations in Korea, Development Cooperation: Theory and Practice, Korean Economic Development, and Research Methods.

She has carried out numerous research projects including the evaluation of Korea's aid for gender equality, as well as the allocation of Korea and Japan's ODA for gender equality. Recently she has worked on a project for the Busan Global Partnership modalities in the ear of Sustainable Development Goal. She has also conducted an extensive research on the role of remittances as effective development finance in Asia. She has been actively involved in diverse training courses for women from developing countries in order to promote gender equality and women's empowerment.